

Impacts of the Regulation

The amendments proposed by the Bill do not have a social, including demographic impact, nor impact on national security and foreign relations, as well as on the living and natural environment and regional development. There is also no impact on the organisation of state agencies and local governments.

The implementation of the Regulation will result in harmonisation of the Estonian legislation on radio communications with international legislation (on radiocommunications). Fulfilment of the requirements laid down in the Regulation will prevent interference and ensure interoperability and safe use of radio equipment.

The Regulation is without prejudice to the rights of persons currently using radio frequencies, since the introduction of additional technical requirements for radio equipment used on the basis of a frequency authorisation and the amendment of the existing requirements will not affect the validity of the existing frequency authorisations and the requirements laid down therein.
