5. article 6, paragraph 2, second indent of Directive (EU) 2015/1535

6. The Slovak Republic files a detailed opinion on the legislative proposal of Austria, which establishes prohibited substances in tobacco products and liquids for electronic cigarettes (2024/0610/AT) – further as the Draft Law.

The Draft Law aims to prohibit certain ingredients in tobacco products and electronic cigarettes, as listed in Article 7(6) of the Tobacco Products Directive 2014/40/EU (further as the Directive or TPD). However, in the category of additives that have CMR properties in unburnt form, the Draft Law (in 5.4) includes substances, which according to the MAK and BAT values list (published by the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft (DFG)), have been classified by the MAK Commission as having teratogenic effects. Based on the entry for glycerol on the MAK list, it belongs to the risk group C, thus considered as a teratogen. It could, therefore, result to prohibition on the use of glycerol in production of selected tobacco products placed on the Austrian market.

A ban on glycerol would make the production of tobacco products and all electronic cigarettes technically unfeasible, which would de facto mean a ban on several product categories. Such a restriction would constitute an introduction of trade barriers within the meaning of Article 34 of the TFEU, preventing the sale of compliant products lawfully placed on the market in other Member States. Austria's regulation would create disparities in the internal market, create legal uncertainty for producers and distributors operating in the EU, prevent equal access to the market and ultimately cause significant economic damage.

The Draft Law states that in transposing the ban on certain ingredients, national legislation has largely followed the wording of Directive 2014/40/EU. The Directive (in Article 7) foresees full harmonisation of national rules related to the content or composition of tobacco products and electronic cigarettes in order to avoid creation of barriers to trade due to different national legislations. TPD (in Article 24(1)) forbids Member States to prohibit or restrict placing of tobacco or related products on the market which comply with this Directive. The objective of the Directive is to approximate the laws, regulations and administrative provisions of the Member States concerning the ingredients and emissions of tobacco products in order to facilitate the smooth functioning of the internal market. Subsequently, there is no room for manoeuvre to act beyond the rules of the TPD in ingredients of tobacco and related products. The Member States' markets are harmonised by the composition list defined by the Directive, with glycerol being an authorised additive (Commission Implementing Decision 2016/787) and not classified as a CMR substance. More stringent ingredients regulations for tobacco products cannot be introduced and thus, by our opinion, the Draft legislation is not compliant with EU law in this regard. By banning glycerol, Austria is introducing contradictory requirements that conflict with the harmonised framework, which will lead to legal uncertainty for manufacturers and distributors in the EU.

Moreover, the timing of unilateral extension of the prohibited substances is unfortunate, as the European Commission is expected to present an amendment to the TPD within its mandate. At the same time, it should be emphasised that glycerol is a common ingredient in many cosmetic and food products, so this step has a potential to cause complications on a wider scale than just the tobacco and electronic cigarette sector.

In view of the above mentioned, Slovakia is convinced that with the legislative proposal Austria creates obstacles to the functioning of the internal market, restricts the free movement of goods, acts against the objectives of the TPD and the Draft Law is not compatible with the principle of proportionality.
